

James Seward is a Senior Financial Officer in the Capital Markets and Investments team of the World Bank Treasury. He leads the design and implementation of financial solutions for emerging market governments on accessing development financing, managing financial risks, and utilizing innovative financial structures for sustainable investment. He has over 20 years of experience at the World Bank, focusing on global financial sector development, and he has been recognized with 16 performance awards for his work. James has led dozens of advisory, analytical, and financing projects on policy issues, including financial stability, banking reform, regulation, supervision, building financial markets, and expanding access to finance. He has also managed large teams in the Asia and Africa regions. James has published various reports and papers, most recently in 2022, a Working Paper on central bank governance and reserve management. Before joining the World Bank, he worked on sanctions regulation and compliance at the U.S. Department of Treasury and on the Middle East and North Africa portfolio at the U.S. Department of State. James has a Master of Public Policy from Harvard University and a Bachelor of Political Science and Business Administration from James Madison University. He also recently obtained the Sustainability and Climate Risk certificate from the Global Association of Risk Professionals.

---

Timothy Bishop is Senior Policy Analyst in the Capital Markets and Financial Institutions Division at the OECD and manages the OECD's Insurance and Private Pensions Committee (IPPC). He has been with the OECD Secretariat since 2006 and has contributed in a number of different policy areas. Prior to his current position, assumed in June 2021, he was leading OECD work on infrastructure finance and played a leading role in supporting an OECD-wide initiative on sustainable infrastructure. He was Head of the Financial Affairs Division from 2014-16. Previous to this role, he led the insurance work of the OECD's IPPC. Prior to the OECD, Mr. Bishop worked in the Financial Sector Policy Branch at the Department of Finance in Ottawa, Canada. Mr. Bishop has an M. Phil in Economics from the University of Oxford.